

Regenerative Election

Prototyping a New Model of Democratic Participation and Civic Imagination

Democratic Renewal

Participatory

Values-Aligned

Co-Creation

Civic Imagination

Overview and Purpose

This proposal introduces the concept of a Regenerative Election — a pre-ballot, participatory, values-driven electoral process designed to prototype the future of democracy before it enters the constraints of the legacy electoral system. It serves as a public experiment in democratic evolution, inviting civic imagination, fostering trust, and modeling a dignified, generative alternative to polarizing politics.

The Regenerative Election is not about partisanship or power-seeking, but about demonstrating what governance can feel like when it is rooted in feedback, transparency, collective intelligence, and care.

⚠ The Problem: Crisis in Electoral Culture

The current electoral system faces deep structural challenges that undermine democratic participation and trust.

- Disillusionment and Disengagement: The public feels alienated by binary choices, adversarial debates, and negative campaigning.
- Institutional Mistrust: Corporate influence and opaque party systems erode belief in democratic integrity.

- Absence of Feedback Loops: Citizens are not meaningfully involved in shaping platforms or policy vision.
- Narrative Deficit: Politics lacks ceremony, soul, and the creative capacity to imagine new futures.

Implementation Steps for a Regenerative Election

1. Convene a Regenerative Election Coalition

Bring together independent organizers, technologists, civic innovators, and aligned leaders across sectors to design and steward the process. This includes developing transparent debate formats, digital engagement tools, a shared code of ethics, and decentralized infrastructure for participation and data integrity.

2. Engage the Independent Majority

Over 51% of U.S. voters now identify as independent, disillusioned by partisan polarization and institutional gridlock. The Regenerative Election is designed as a platform for this majority to reclaim agency in shaping the future. By creating a new public forum for leadership selection—outside traditional party primaries—it offers a coherent alternative path toward unifying representation.

3. Design a Participatory Pre-Election Process

This includes:

- Public submission of candidacies
- Community deliberation tools powered by collective sensemaking
- Open digital debates and values-based questionnaires
- Ranked-choice or quadratic voting to surface aligned leaders

4. Coordinate State-by-State Ballot Access Campaigns

While the Regenerative Election operates initially outside of the formal system, its outputs can be strategically harnessed to meet traditional ballot thresholds.

- Each state has unique petition and signature requirements
- A unified independent candidate, backed by national support from Regenerative Election participants, can trigger coordinated grassroots petition drives

- This bottom-up surge would demonstrate popular support while also satisfying legal thresholds for ballot inclusion

5. Showcase a New Era of Political Culture

The entire process should model the future we seek: transparent, respectful, dignified, and solutions-oriented. By demonstrating how a parallel political infrastructure can function with care and integrity, the Regenerative Election becomes both a symbol and a seed of system renewal.

✓ Net Positive Outcomes

- ✓ Reimagined Democratic Process: A blueprint for elections as generative, participatory, and meaningful
- ✓ Civic Trust-Building: Transparency and integrity rebuild faith in leadership processes
- ✓ Shared Ownership: Citizens feel invited to co-create rather than passively consume
- ✓ Wisdom-Driven Platforms: Proposals emerge from dialogue, not top-down promises
- ✓ Movement Seeding: Sparks a distributed network of political and cultural regeneration

Conclusion and Call to Action

The Regenerative Election is not about electing a hero. It is about electing a new possibility: one where democracy becomes a living, learning, and healing process. By prototyping a new election outside the legacy timeline, we create space for trust to grow, imagination to flourish, and communities to align around values that nourish life.

This is not a rejection of civic responsibility. It is its expansion. Let us remember that voting is not the beginning or end of political participation. It is one moment in a much longer, sacred act of choosing who we become—together.

Let us not campaign against a broken system. Let us prototype the one we would be proud to inherit.
